Sloux half-breed scrip. New York, May 24 .- It is reported that Woerishoeffer covered his Lackawanna shorts yesterday. The pool in Central Pacific is very strong. The largest buyers of the market yesterday were D. O. Mills and J. G. Mills, Smith, Morgan, Osborn, and John Shaw. The latter has just joined the bull people. Morgan and Smith have bought very largely of Jersey Central, Lake Shore, Lackawanna, and St. Paul. The Mills people bought Erie. J. G. Mills says that the people who are buying stocks now will have no stocks for sale under a 10 per cent, advance, and the short interest has increased so greatly that the bears do not even pretend to make their deliveries; that there are no long stocks pressing on the market for sale, and the Mills people believe there will be a great rise in the market during June and July. Schipp bought Union Pacific largely, and Osborn continues a pronounced bull on the situation. The bulls in Jersey say that the Reading guarantee of 6 per cent, comes shead of all the Reading sureties, and independent of this the road will earn from 8 to 10 per cent. There is good buying of Jersey incomes and the talk is 110 for them.

The room traders think that there will The room traders think that there will probably be some reductions to-day, but they will not sell short. They say that while the market closed a large portion of the buying came from parties who "run" easily, and there was about as much manipulation as ever yesterday. The Vanderbilt party are very bullish on Lake Shore, and say that the shorts have not began covering, and this stock is going up presently. The Wabash Pacific railway people say the car orders last week were large, but the storm did some damage which may prevent any increase in the earnings for the past week.

It was reported in railway and pig iron cir-cles last night that the Allentown (Pa.) iron works would suspend to day. This concern failed in 1873 for $750,000, and has since been

But the real success of the carnival was achieved by an impromptu company. The students of Venice and Padua, remember-ing the terrible distress wrought by the autumn floods in the Veneto, determined to give a grand show, and to devote the proceeds to the inundated. They began at BATEMAN & Co., ceeds to the inundated. They began at Undine, passed through Conegliano and Treviso, reaching Venice last of all. A considerable discussion was raised concerning this show. No one knew exactly in what it was to consist; but some odd stories had leaked out, and by the time the students came to Venice, the curlosity of the town, always lively, was worked up to a high pitch. The affair promised to be something of importance, for the municipality had granted the best places on the Piazetta to the students for their booths, and some soldiers from the barracks were at work lifting the pavement and fixing the uprights. Then the company arrived—250 leaks in a body, and fell to upon the work with a will, hammering up the planks and fixing the uprights. Then the company arrived—250 lads in a body, and fell to upon the work with a will, hammering up the planks with great din, driving in four nails where one only was required, chattering, laughing, and joking with the crowd, whose curiosity was rapidly becoming unbearably acute. The day before the opening of the show had come, and apparently nothing to show had arrived as yet. Neither St. George and his dragon, nor the city of Malta, nor the museum of natural history, nor the mouster with his head where his tail should be, nor any of the sights that were advertised. "Cossa fanno sti nati di cani?" "What are they about these sons of dogs?" But the only answer was a langhing "Pazienza; pazienza. Come to-morrow and you will see." And sure enough on the morrow the show was opened, and there were all the students with drums, barrel organs, horns, and voices—shouting, banging, and drowning the other showmen along the Riva, ruining the other showmen along the Riva, ruining their custom, and drawing all the people into the Piazzetta. "Walk up; waik up, signori! Here is the only real San Giorgio al matural." So the crowd pressed into the small-boath between the two columns. One by one shey were invited to look through a peophole, and there was their old friend San Giorgio Maggiore staring them calmly in the face.

The students had calculated on the curios— $1.525.

giore staring them calmly in the face.

The students had calculated on the curiosity of their fellow countrymen to override suspicion of the bare looking booths and to draw them inside. They counted with equal certainty upon their holding their with equal cortainty upon their holding their tongues when they got outside for fear of being laughed at. And those who came out, as a matter of fact, said never a word until presently the joke took wind, and for the rest of the day the crowd streamed through the booth, each one paying his ten ceutimes. It was the same with all the other booths. At the theater the company suddenly lost their voices when all the seats were full, and as suddenly recovered them when the last disappointed playeer had filed out of the house. The city of Malta proved to be a heap of lime. The museum contained a solitary carrot. Mary, Queen of Scots.

Claude Nau, who was private secretary to Mary, Queen of Scots, for many years, left a diary, now in the Cottonion library, which has now been published. Of the book, the London Athensum says: The details are remarkably precise and asgurate, and among the incidents thus revealed for the first time is the fact of Mary having had a miscarriage at Lochleven, but for which she would have been the mother of twins by Bothwell. This is not, perhaps, after all, a material fact, but shows how little we are justified in imagining that we knew everything, even about one of the best explored pages in history, that it shows how little we are justified in imagining that we knew everything, even about one of the best explored pages in history, that it should never have been as much as suspected before.
